

As I understand it, consideration is being given to a less strenuous version of the home nuisance contact legislation than what we currently enjoy in Indiana. This state does few things that turn out to be correct but our system for not bothering people at their home has been superb. There were times in the past when we received as many as twenty five calls in a single week selling, soliciting, begging, or in other ways simply taking time from our all ready busy schedule. I wish that charities, newspapers and our other exempted numbers were not exempted but maybe someday I will have the technology to block even those nuisance calls. I appreciate not being bothered at meal time, bedtime, on the weekends, etc and really having a chance to enjoy my retirement. I simply do not understand why the lobbying interests that support this weaker legislation do not have an interest in allowing people to enjoy their peace and quiet. If I truly want to buy something, subscribe to something, or contribute to something, I am perfectly capable of doing so. Don't call me, I'll call you. William D. Lumbley
